

PMRA Market Bottom Indicator Successfully Detected 2009 Stock Market Bottom

Protect My Retirement Account. com (www.ProtectMyRetirementAccount.com) has developed an extraordinary new technical indicator called the "PMRA Market Bottom Indicator" that detects stock market bottoms with amazing accuracy.

The Woodlands, TX (PRWEB) October 26, 2009 -- In the Protect My Retirement Account.com blog entry back on March 21st, 2009 entitled "Forming a Sustainable Bottom", CEO and Chief Technical Analyst, Joseph Soltra, wrote "... our proprietary PMRA Market Bottom Indicator is currently showing a large positive divergence with the S&P 500 Index, indicating that the overall market for stocks is definitely gaining strength. It is just a matter of time before the demand for stocks will begin to drive prices higher, causing the Dow Jones Industrial Average and the other major market indexes to rise once again over the long term." Now, seven months later, the Dow Jones Industrial Average is up almost 38% from that point.

Mr. Soltra stated, "I started Protect My Retirement Account.com because buy-and-hold stock investing just doesn't work anymore. Over the past ten years, investors have been through two of the worst stock market crashes in history and have seen their retirement savings and their retirement dreams disappear - even investors who were very well diversified".

Continued Mr. Soltra, "In these volatile financial times, diversification is simply not enough. Investors facing retirement who are looking to preserve capital as well as enjoy significant returns are recognizing the severe limitations of traditional buy-and-hold stock investing."

Lily Rodriguez, who has been a subscriber to the PMRA service since August 2009, said, "After losing so much money in my retirement account before deciding to put my savings in a money-market fund, I thought I would never invest in stocks again. Since I subscribed to your service, I'm now invested in stocks at the right time. Thank you!"
